

LOVE.

Into my heart a silent look Flashed from thy winking eyes,
And what I felt a wondrous look
The light of summer skies.
The first born love was in that look,
The Venus face from the deep
Of soft, impassioned sin.

My life, like some lone, solemn spot,
Where angels tear-drops pour, Grew faint with a glory not In earth or heaven before.
Sweet trouble thrilled the haunted spot,
And open doors of trembling thought,
Thy presence wandered o'er.

My being warmed and erept to thee,
As if in some ecstatic dream,
Thy soul had been part of mine,
And I a joyous, shining beam.
Thy very life I knew thine,
But needed no hand to lead,
Which joined us heart and hand.

These moments beside thee, forms as rare,
These untroubled hours as sweet,
But round me breathed the enchanted air,
'Twas life and death to meet;
And henceforth thou alone wert fair,
White, blossoms, music, stars, in joy Thy love did oft repeat.

SYMPATHY.

Come and sit beside me
Under this still tree;
Come, unfold thy troubles,
Whatever they be.
I will wipe the tear-drops
Off thy lovely cheek,
With soft words, or better,
With these lips that speak.

Come and sit beside me,
Neath this spreading tree;
Winds will never whisper
What you breathe to me.
When thy heart's unfolded,
And its secrets known,
I will gently fold it Close unto my own.

Angels.

There's many an empty cradle,
There's many a vacant bed,
There's many a lonely home,
Where joy and light have fled;
For lack in myriad graveyards
The money-bills lie,
And every hollow mirror forth
An angel in the sky.

The Human Hand.

Issuing from the wrist in that wonderful organ, the human hand. "In a French book, intended," says Sir Charles Bell, "to teach young people philosophy, the pupil asks why the fingers are not of the same length? The master makes the scholar grasp a ball of ivory, to show him that the points of the fingers are then equal. It would have been better had he closed the fingers upon the palm, and then have asked whether or not they corresponded. This difference in the length of the fingers serves a thousand purposes, as in holding a rod, a switch, a sword, a hammer, a pen, a pencil, or engraving tool; in all of which, a secure hold and freedom of motion are admirably combined."

On the length, strength and perfectly free movements of the thumb depend more over the power of the human hand.
To the thumb, indeed has been given a special name ("pollex," from a Latin verb meaning to be able, strong, mighty,) because of its strength—a strength that is necessary to the power of the hand, being equal to that of all the fingers. Without the fleshy ball of the thumb, the power of the fingers would be of no avail, and accordingly the large ball formed by the muscles of the thumb is the special work of the human hand, and particularly that of a clever workman. The loss of the thumb almost amounts to the loss of the hand.

Conscript, unwilling to serve in the army of France have been known to disable themselves effectually by cutting off the thumb of the right hand. The loss of both thumbs would reduce a man to the most miserable dependence. Nor should we overlook another peculiarity. Were the tips of the fingers and the thumbs but instead of being covered with flesh, many things we readily do would be absolutely impossible. We now can take up what is small, soft and round; as a millet seed, or even a particle of hair. So exquisitely prehensile are the human fingers. The nails are often of special service—perhaps always in the works of art which require nicety of execution. Their substance is just what is needed; they are easily kept at just the precise length which answers every purpose; had they been placed on the tips of the fingers, they would have been a loss of power, but their position ensures their highest efficiency. An exchange of power for velocity which takes place in the arm adapts the hand and fingers to a thousand arts, requiring quick or lively motions.

In setting up the type of this page there have been movements on the part of the compositor of surprising rapidity to an ordinary observer, and the execution of performers on the piano forte, as well as many wind instruments, is often astonishing, these are among many instances of the advantage gained by this sacrifice of force for velocity of movement.—[Cassell's Popular Natural History.

A Gascon officer, who had served under Henry IV., king of France, and not having received any pay for a considerable time, came to the king and confidently said to him,

"Sir, three words to your majesty, money or discharge."
"Four with you," answered his majesty,
"neither one nor t'other."

Beautiful Reply.—A good man in affliction who was asked how he bore his sorrows so well, replied, "It lightens the stroke to draw near to him who handles the rod."

Woman.—No more surely does the Empress of night illuminate and beautify the whole canopy of heaven, than does woman, if educated right, irradiate and give her fairest tints to her own fireside.
